

University Affiliates Total 50

The Academy is pleased to announce that the number of University Affiliates has grown to 50. American University in Washington, D.C., and Boston College have become the newest members of this consortium, which includes colleges and universities from across the country. These institutions provide support and guidance for Academy research on higher education, including the Visiting Scholars Program. Representatives of the Affiliates will take part in a new study of the successes and failures of general education requirements in achieving science literacy; it will include an analysis of national data on student course-taking in the sciences as well as case studies of innovative approaches to teaching science to nonscience majors at American institutions of higher learning.

The Academy is grateful to Cornelius Kerwin, Interim President of American University; to Rev. William P. Leahy, S.J., President of Boston College; and to the leaders of all the Affiliates for their confidence in our efforts to advance studies on critical issues in higher education and to encourage the work of younger scholars who will become important contributors to their fields of study.
