AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ARTS AND SCIENCES ARCHIVES

Series I-C-1: General Records. Communications to the Academy – Bound, 1780-1810

ADMINISTRATIVE INFORMATION

Historical Note

In the nineteenth century, several manuscript communications were glued into two scrapbook volumes labeled “Papers.” They have since been removed from the scrapbooks and individually conserved, but because the bound volumes were available to researchers, the distinction has been retained.

Scope and Content

The Bound Communications consist of correspondence and articles sent to the American Academy for consideration by Academy Members and possible publication in the Academy’s Memoirs or Proceedings. Most are in the form of letters or documents, submitted to the Academy by Fellows and members of the public in hopes of discussion by the Academy, possible endorsement, and eventual publication. Most concern observations of natural phenomena, especially of the heavens; some describe new concepts in mathematics; and others describe medical events and offer new solutions for improvement in prevention and treatment of disease. Subjects also include antiquities, such as the Dighton Rock, and antique systems of writing. The documents also cover finance and commerce, most with the understanding that improvements in technology will benefit all of society.

Volume

2 volumes contained within 3.0 document cases, Boxes 2028.1, 2028.2, 2028.3 (1.5 linear feet)

Arrangement

The original order of the materials has been maintained. The communications are arranged in two bound volumes in rough chronological order.
