Acknowledgements

In conducting a survey of this size and scope, one incurs numerous debts. First, and foremost, we thank the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, without whose generous support neither the Humanities Indicators nor this survey would exist. (With the important caveat that any views, findings or conclusions expressed in this report do not necessarily represent those of the Foundation.)

We also benefited from the talents and good humor of the indefatigable data professionals at the American Institute of Physics' Statistical Research Center, especially Anne Marie Porter.

Finally, we are profoundly grateful to each of the 1,419 department chairs and administrators who responded to the survey. Their information and insights provide the basis for all that follows.

Introduction

Discussions about the ongoing health of the humanities in higher education tend to focus on a single data series: the trend in undergraduate degrees. The American Academy's Humanities Indicators (HI) developed and has fielded three rounds of the Humanities Department Survey (HDS 1/2/3, with data collected for years 2007, 2012, and 2017) to provide a fuller picture of the field and supply the data necessary for a more substantive conversation about the humanities in four-year colleges and universities.

The third iteration of the survey, the findings of which are presented here, examines recent trends in the 12 disciplines included in the previous surveys (art history; classical studies; communication; English; folklore; history; history of science; languages and literatures other than English [LLE]; linguistics; musicology; philosophy; and religion). The scope of the survey was also expanded to provide benchmark information on four additional disciplines (American studies, anthropology, race/ethnic studies, and women/gender studies) that rest in the borderlands between the humanities and the social sciences.

In 2018, with generous funding from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, the staff of the HI worked with stakeholders in the scholarly societies representing each discipline to revise the survey instrument to address new challenges facing the humanities field. The survey was then administered to a sample of degree-granting departments at four-year colleges and universities in each discipline by the Statistical Research Center at the American Institute of Physics. ${ }^{1}$ The center also performed the statistical weighting and analysis necessary to produce the national estimates for 2017, along with the comparisons with 2012, presented below. The last section of this introduction includes important information about of the nature of the estimates for the disciplines included in previous rounds of the survey (referred to as "repeat disciplines" in the report). Please see "The Populations Described by the Estimates in This Report" in the Appendix for a more thorough discussion of the issue.

The following report focuses on seven areas of interest to the field:

1. the number of departments granting degrees in each discipline ${ }^{2}$;
2. the mix of faculty teaching in humanities departments;

[^0]3. the number of undergraduate students and the types of benchmarking (assessment) practices used for majors;
4. the number of graduate students and financial support for doctoral students;
5. policies and practices to prepare humanities students for careers;
6. the incorporation of digital humanities and teaching methods; and
7. policies and practices to support faculty in the range of roles they perform (as teachers, scholars, and contributors to the community outside their departments). The data tables on which the narrative and figures in this report are based can be found in an appendix to the report and on the Academy's website. Also available on the website are profiles of the surveyed disciplines. These provide more detailed information on departments' students, faculty, and practices (the appendix to this report also contains the data tables associated with all the discipline profiles; each profile contains the tables for that discipline).

The findings presented here encompass only departments at four-year colleges and universities. For information about the humanities enterprise at community colleges, see https://www.amacad.org/humanities-indicators/higher-education-surveys/survey-humanities-community-colleges-introduction.

Challenges Associated with New Disciplines

Of the new disciplines added to the third iteration of the HDS, three presented challenges. As departments and programs, "American studies," "race/ethnic studies," and "women/gender studies" each tend to represent discrete coalitions of faculty around a specific topic. Personnel often overlap among the three subject areas and with other humanities disciplines included in the survey. As a result, the estimates likely include some double counting of faculty who are employed in more than one subject area.

The disciplinary constructs of race/ethnic studies and women/gender studies also have limitations as topical constructs. For the purposes of the study, the race/ethnic studies category was defined so as to include every institution that granted degrees in a subject area defined by the U.S. Department of Education's Classification of Instructional Programs as studying a race or ethnic group within the United States. ${ }^{3}$ In the course of the survey, however, staff encountered resistance from some departments and degreegranting programs: 1) some defined themselves as a social science and refused to [^1]participate in the study; and 2) two programs in Native American studies objected that inclusion in the race/ethnic studies category represented a fundamental misunderstanding of their position as both a native population and (in one case) the advocacy role of their program. Some of the departments and programs in women/gender studies also objected that they were more properly understood as social sciences, but all agreed to participate with the understanding that the survey results would also be presented separately for the discipline. ${ }^{4}$ Even though the programs and departments in race/ethnic studies and women/gender studies are treated for this report as part of the humanities (in keeping with the HI's definition of the field), the HI appreciates that specific programs and departments have their own perspective on how they are aligned within and between the humanities and social sciences.

Guide to Interpreting the Findings Presented in This Report

For HDS 3, the HI used the same samples drawn at the time the discipline was first included in the survey. In the course of developing HDS 3, staff discovered that for each discipline some previously sampled departments had ceased to grant degrees in that discipline (either after the 2007-08 academic year, for disciplines first included in HDS 1, or after the 2012-13 academic year, for disciplines added for HDS 2). A check of the U.S. Department of Education's Integrated Postsecondary Data System (IPEDS) showed, however, that for every discipline at least a few institutions had started granting degrees in the interim.

This feature of the HDS-that it accounts for departments that ceased to grant degrees after a discipline was added to the study but does not account for departments that began to grant degrees during this period-is particularly important to remember when interpreting any estimated totals (departments, students, faculty, etc.) presented in the report. For disciplines that were part of HDS 1 and HDS 2, such totals may be an undercount; that is, the complete population of departments that existed in 2017-18 was likely larger.

Please also keep in mind that the HDS findings presented here are estimates. They are based not on census of institutions (such as IPEDS, which is the basis of some of the findings presented in the first section of the report) but on a sample of institutions. This fact is flagged by the inclusion of the word estimated in figure titles and throughout the report's narrative.

Statistically significant changes in averages and percentages from 2012 to 2017 are noted in the narrative report of the findings and accompanying data visualizations. If no change

[^2]is indicated, this could mean continuity between years, but it might also be attributable to 1) the item having not been included (or phrased differently) on the earlier survey; 2) HDS 3 being the first round of the survey to include the discipline; or 3) the number of respondents being too low for a test of statistical significance to be valid.

In some cases, both averages and medians are presented. For averages, statistical testing was performed to determine whether changes had occurred since HDS 2. Such testing was not performed for medians.

Any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term.
Finally, a note on terminology. For the sake of readability, department is used in the body of the report, though some disciplines-linguistics, for example-may exist at a given institution as a program within a department or across multiple departments.

1. Departments

These findings - and the rest of those included in the report (except for Figure 1B) - are based on samples of departments drawn in three separate years. For disciplines that appeared in the two earlier rounds of the HDS, the presented estimates do not describe all departments that were granting degrees in the 2016-17 school year. For such "repeat disciplines," the estimates provided in this report are for the population of departments granting degrees in the year the discipline joined the survey, minus any of those departments no longer granting degrees in 2017. The survey was able to detect departments that had ceased to grant degrees between the year the discipline first joined the survey and 2017, but in order to maintain a comparable sampling frame did not include any departments that began granting degrees during that period.

Key findings:

- In fall 2017, LLE, English, and history had the largest estimated number of departments at four-year colleges and universities (1,221, 1,062, and 921 respectively), just as they did in 2007, the first year for which the HDS was conducted (Figure 1A). Two disciplines added for HDS 2-communication and philosophy - were the only other humanities disciplines with more than 750 departments. Among the disciplines introduced with HDS 3, anthropology had 427 departments, race/ethnic studies and women/gender studies had somewhat less than 300 departments (272 and 283), and American studies had 165 departments.
- The HDS focuses on departments at four-year institutions that grant bachelor's, master's, and/or doctoral degrees. According to data from the U.S. Department of Education, in four of the six largest humanities disciplines, the number of colleges and universities granting degrees declined from 2012 to 2017 (i.e., the years examined by HDS 2 and HDS 3; Figure 1B). The largest decrease, $6.2 \%$, was in the number of institutions granting LLE degrees. The number granting degrees in religion fell $3.2 \%$. Conversely, the number of institutions granting degrees in communication increased $5.1 \%$ over the period, and the number granting English degrees increased $0.5 \%$. Looking back further, however, the number of institutions granting degrees in every discipline grew at least 5\% from 1999 to 2017, with a 58\% increase for communication.
- In the disciplines with a larger number of departments (such as communication, English, history, LLE, and philosophy), the HDS estimates that more than half of departments did not grant graduate degrees (as indicated in Figure 1A). In many of the smaller humanities disciplines, however (especially folklore, history of science, linguistics, and musicology), almost all the departments granted graduate degrees - and tended to be at research universities. Among departments granting only bachelor's degrees, many offered at least a few graduate-level courses for credit. These facts are important to bear in mind when assessing the differences among departments on such measures as the average number of graduate students.

1A: Estimated Number of Humanities Departments and Number of Such Departments Granting Graduate Degrees, by Survey Population and Discipline, Fall 2017

* For disciplines that were included in previous rounds of the survey, the pictured values represent the departments granting degrees in the year indicated that were still granting degrees in 2017. It does not include any departments that began granting degrees between the two time points.
 A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

For the values underlying this figure: See Tables 1a and 1b in the Appendix, Part A, and the fourth table in each subsection of Part B (e.g., Table AH4, Table EN4).

1B: Number of Institutions Granting Bachelor's, Master's, or Doctoral Degrees in Selected Humanities Disciplines, 1999-2017 Academic Years*

* The count for each year includes institutions that granted at least three degrees in the three-year period including that year and the previous two.

2. Faculty

The original impetus for undertaking the HDS was to track trends in humanities faculty following the demise of the federal government's National Study of Postsecondary Faculty - the only available source of data on the employment status and demographics of faculty. ${ }^{5}$ The need for such data to inform planning by university administrators, graduate programs, and policymakers seemed evident even before the sharp decline in the academic job market that occurred after 2007. ${ }^{6}$
(For the purposes of tabulating the number of faculty, departments were asked to exclude graduate students and personnel with 100 percent research appointments.)

Key findings:

- Despite the relatively small number of tenure-line positions advertised with scholarly societies in most of the disciplines (the exception being communication), the 2017-18 survey reveals little change in the average number of faculty per department (Figure 2A). Only linguistics and the combined departments (language and literature departments that grant degrees in both English and LLE) had statistically significant changes from 2012 to 2017 in the average number of faculty per department. Linguistics showed an increase, while the combined departments had a decrease.
- English departments had the largest average number of faculty (full- and parttime) in the humanities (an estimated 23 faculty members per department), while communication, history, and LLE and had an estimated average of from 15 to 17 faculty members. Folklore departments had the smallest number of faculty (4.1), on average.
- In most of the humanities disciplines, the estimated average number of faculty per department was modestly higher than the median for each discipline, which indicates that a small number of unusually large departments skewed the averages upward. English departments are unusual in that the average (23) was substantially lower than the median (28), indicating that a handful of very small departments pulled down the average for that discipline.

[^3]- A common perception is that tenure-track faculty lines are being displaced by nontenured and part-time adjunct positions. ${ }^{7}$ In the repeat disciplines, the HDS found no statistically significant increases from 2012 to 2017 in the share of faculty employed off the tenure track (see Table 2 in the Appendix). An estimated $62 \%$ of all humanities faculty members were tenured or on the tenure track in 2017 (Figure 2B). The two disciplines with the smallest estimated share of faculty in tenure-line positions were communication, with $45 \%$ of faculty members in tenured or tenure-track positions, and LLE, with $51 \%$. In most humanities disciplines, the share of faculty either tenured or on the tenure track was greater than $70 \%$.
- An estimated $77 \%$ of the faculty in humanities departments were employed in a full-time capacity (Figure 2C). Communication departments had the smallest share of full-time faculty ( $64 \%$ ), but in most of the humanities disciplines, between $70 \%$ and $85 \%$ of the faculty were full-time. Among the repeat disciplines, only English experienced a change in the distribution of faculty between full- and part-time status, with a statistically significant increase in the share of faculty who were fulltime (and a corresponding decrease in the share working part-time).
- Substantial variation in the representation of women persisted among the disciplines of the humanities (Figure 2D). ${ }^{8}$ The HDS estimates that slightly more than half of the faculty members in all surveyed disciplines combined were women, while only $27 \%$ of the faculty in philosophy departments were women. In contrast, women constituted $89 \%$ of the faculty members in women/gender studies programs, and $64 \%$ of faculty in art history. In the repeat disciplines, the survey found no statistically significant change in the representation of women from 2012 to 2017.
- In most of the disciplines (and especially those in which women are comparatively underrepresented), the share of women among tenure-track faculty was substantially larger than the share among tenured faculty (Figure 2E). In [^4]philosophy, for instance, women constituted $48 \%$ of the tenure-track faculty but only $25 \%$ of the faculty members with tenure.

- In most humanities disciplines, the estimated share of faculty in nontenured or non-tenure-track positions who were women was smaller than the share of tenuretrack positions filled by women. The exceptions were the combined English/LLE departments (in which $75 \%$ of the faculty in nontenurable positions were women, compared to $38 \%$ of the faculty on the tenure track), linguistics ( $70 \%$ and $48 \%$ ), LLE ( $70 \%$ and $57 \%$ ), and classical studies ( $54 \%$ and $48 \%$ ).
- English departments had the greatest estimated number of annual faculty departures, an average of 750 per year in academic years 2015-16 and 2016-17, but an equal number of faculty members were hired to fill permanent positions for the 2017-18 academic year (Figure 2F). LLE had the second largest number of departures (625), but also had the largest number of new faculty hires (800). Only in philosophy departments was the number of departing faculty substantially larger than the number of faculty hired.
- An estimated $58 \%$ of English departments had at least one faculty member come up for tenure in academic years 2015-16 and 2016-17, while at departments of anthropology, history, and communication, the shares were just below $50 \%$ (Figure 2G). These disciplines had the largest shares, while history of science, philosophy, and folklore had the smallest shares of departments with tenure activity: $27 \%, 27 \%$, and $20 \%$ respectively. Disciplines with a small average faculty size generally had smaller shares, though in LLE departments, which have one of the larger average faculty sizes, only $36 \%$ had at least one faculty member come up for tenure.
- Most humanities faculty members who came up for tenure received it, according to the survey, but a nonnegligible number of junior faculty appeared to leave prior to facing a tenure decision (Figure $\mathbf{2 H}$ ). Across all humanities disciplines, an estimated 920 faculty members received tenure per academic year (averaged over 2015-16 and 2016-17), which was more than eleven times the average number denied tenure (81). However, the study also indicates that 219 faculty members left their departments prior to a tenure decision. (For HDS findings regarding the criteria used for tenure, see "Other Department Policies and Practices," below.)
- Among the repeat disciplines, only history had a statistically significant decline from HDS 2 to HDS 3 in both the amount of tenure activity and the average number of faculty receiving tenure.

2A: Estimated Average and Median Number of Faculty Members per

 Humanities Department, by Discipline, Fall 2017

Analysis of change over time in the median value for each discipline was not conducted as part of this study.

* A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE). Interpret this estimate with caution; the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate.
 Interpret with caution; the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate.

2B: Estimated Distribution of Humanities Faculty Members across Tenure Statuses, by Discipline, Fall 2017*

* For most disciplines, the estimate for at least one of the faculty categories should be interpreted with caution, as the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate. Please see Table 2 in the Appendix for details.
 A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

2C: Estimated Shares of Full- and Part-Time Humanities Faculty Members, by Discipline, Fall 2017*

* Some part-time faculty members are tenured or tenure-track.
 A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

2D: Estimated Share of Humanities Faculty Members Who Are Women, by Discipline, Fall 2017

* A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).
 Estimate should be interpreted with caution, as the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate.

2E: Estimated Share of Humanities Faculty Members at Each Tenure Status Who Are Women, by Discipline, Fall 2017*

* Folklore and history of science have been excluded because reliable estimates could not be generated for these disciplines.
 A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

For the values underlying this figure: See Table 4 in the Appendix, Part A.

2F: Comparison of Humanities Faculty Hires (2017-18 Academic Year) to

 Departures (2015-16 & 2016-17), Estimates by Discipline
*A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

For the values underlying this figure: See Table 5 in the Appendix, Part A.

2G: Estimated Share of Humanities Departments with Tenure Activity over a Two-Year Period (2015-16 & 2016-17 Academic Years), by Discipline

* A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

For the values underlying this figure: See Table 6 in the Appendix, Part A.

2H: Faculty Members in the Tenure Process per Humanities Discipline, Estimated Annual Average, 2015-16 & 2016-17 Academic Years

* A combined department is one that grants degrees in English, and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

For the values underlying this figure: See Table 6 in the Appendix, Part A.

3. Undergraduate Students

In addition to meeting the need for data on humanities faculty, the HDS was created to provide a deeper understanding of the student population. In recent years, the news media have focused a considerable amount of attention on the trend in the number of undergraduates earning humanities degrees. This survey rounds out that story with new estimates of enrollment in undergraduate classes, as well as the number of declared majors, completed minors, and degree recipients. (For the long-term trend in the number of students receiving undergraduate degrees, please see the HI's main indicator set at https://www.amacad.org/humanities-indicators/higher-education/bachelors-degreeshumanities). The survey also asked departments about a range of practices related to their undergraduate students, such as benchmarking requirements for majors. The findings for benchmarking are presented in this section. Information on other ways departments serve undergraduates, including workforce preparation and professional training, is provided in Section 5 of the report.

Key findings:

- The HDS estimates that, in fall 2017, enrollment in humanities departments' undergraduate courses was at least six million (see Table 10 in the Appendix; all enrollment findings include duplicated headcounts-i.e., students who enrolled in more than one course in a discipline were counted in each course in which they enrolled). ${ }^{9}$ On a per department basis, history and English had the highest average enrollment (an estimated 1,174 and 1,157 respectively; Figure 3A). Apart from American studies and women/gender studies, each of the disciplines had an average per department enrollment of at least 400 in its undergraduate courses.
- In every discipline except religion, the estimated average enrollment in undergraduate courses was substantially higher than the median, indicating that a few departments with particularly high enrollment skewed the average upward. Only English and history had a median enrollment of over 500, while in departments of classical studies and American studies, the median was less than a third of the average.

[^5]- The HDS is the only survey to track and report the number of students completing minors in the humanities, and the study estimates that a handful of disciplines granted substantially more minors, on average, than the others (Figure 3B). Communication, history of science, and LLE departments granted an estimated average of 30-35 minors each in the academic year of 2016-17. In most of the other humanities disciplines, the average number of students completing minors was between 10 and 20 per department. In none of the repeat disciplines was there a statistically significant change from 2011-12.
- The survey found a statistically significant decline in the estimated average number of degrees granted in departments of art history, English, history, and philosophy from 2011-2012 to 2016-2017 (Figure 3C), as well as a statistically significant decline in the average number of juniors and seniors with declared majors in the disciplines of history, philosophy, and religion.
- The estimated median number of declared majors and bachelor's degree recipients was substantially lower than the average in almost every discipline (Figure 3D). In most of the disciplines, the median number of bachelor's degrees granted was less than ten. The median number of degrees was 20 or higher in only three disciplines: communication, English, and history.
- One of the questions added in this round of the HDS asked about benchmarking requirements for undergraduate majors (Figure 3 E ). When all disciplines are considered together, an estimated $29 \%$ of departments had no benchmarking requirement. Forty-three percent assessed their majors through a paper or thesis requirement, another $10 \%$ used a test, and $29 \%$ used some other form of assessment. Departments in universities focused primarily on research were the least likely to do benchmarking, with $39 \%$ lacking some form of student assessment. Departments in primarily undergraduate colleges were substantially more likely than departments at other types of institutions to use a paper or thesis as the method of benchmarking ( $56 \%$ ).
- History departments were the most likely to have conducted some form of benchmarking ( $87 \%$ had a requirement), while linguistics departments were the least likely ( $38 \%$; Figure 3F). History departments were also the most likely to have required a paper or thesis for their majors ( $74 \%$; see Table 12 in the Appendix), followed closely by American studies (68\%). In each of the other disciplines, less than $53 \%$ of the departments had a paper or thesis requirement.

3A: Estimated Average and Median Enrollment* in Undergraduate Courses per Humanities Department, by Discipline, Fall 2017

Analysis of change over time in the median value for each discipline was not conducted as part of this study.

* Students who enrolled in more than one course in the discipline were counted in each course in which they enrolled.
 A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

3B: Estimated Average and Median Number of Students Completing Minors per Humanities Department, by Discipline, 2016-17 Academic Year

Analysis of change over time in the median value for each discipline was not conducted as part of this study.

* Interpret with caution; the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate.
 A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

For the values underlying this figure: See Tables 9 a and b in the Appendix, Part A.

3C: Estimated Average Number of Bachelor's Degrees Granted (2017-18

 Academic Year) and Declared Majors per Humanities Department (Fall 2017), by Discipline*

* For several disciplines, the estimates should be interpreted with caution because the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate. In other cases, there were too few respondents to provide a reliable estimate of change from 2011-12 (or Fall 2012 for juniors and seniors). Please see Table 9a in the Appendix for details.
${ }^{* *}$ A combined department is one that grants degrees in English and in languages and literatures other than English (LLE).

4. Graduate Students

While the trend in undergraduate degrees tends to attract more attention from observers, the trend in graduate students serves as an important barometer of health for advanced study in the humanities. With that in mind, the HDS also tracks and reports graduate student enrollment, as well as the extent and nature of departmental support for doctoral students. For the long-term trend in the number of students receiving master's and doctoral degrees, please see the HI's main indicator set at https://www.amacad.org/humanities-indicators/higher-education/advanced-degreeshumanities.

Key findings:

- The HDS estimates that in fall 2017 at least 124,000 students were pursuing a graduate degree in humanities departments. Total enrollment in graduate-level humanities courses was almost 400,000 (though students enrolled in more than one course were counted in each course in which they were enrolled). ${ }^{10}$
- The study estimates that linguistics and religion had the highest average enrollment in graduate courses (just above 93 per department), with anthropology and communication departments not far below that level (around 85 each; Figure 4A). The difference between the average and the median for these and several other disciplines suggests that a handful of very large departments skewed the average upward.
- Anthropology had the largest average number of graduate students per department (an estimated 81.5), by a substantial margin (Figure 4B). Several other disciplines (art history, classical studies, communication, English, linguistics, philosophy, and race/ethnic studies) were in the 54-64 student range, while the other disciplines had considerably lower averages. Folklore had the smallest average number of graduate students per department (6). In only two repeat disciplines - English and LLE-did the survey find a statistically significant decline from 2012 to 2017 in the average number of students per department pursuing graduate study.
${ }^{10}$ See Tables 14a, 14b, and 15 in the Appendix, Part A. For disciplines that were included in earlier rounds of the survey, this study does not capture all departments granting degrees in 2017-18, only those still granting degrees in 2017-18. The estimated student count and enrollment total do not reflect those departments that began granting degrees since the year a discipline was first included in the study.
- An estimated 78\% of full-time, first-year doctoral students received full funding for their studies (Figure 4C). Another 12\% received partial funding, and the remaining $10 \%$ received none. In departments of history of science, philosophy, and women/gender studies, all full-time, first-year doctoral students received full funding. Departments of race/ethnic studies had the smallest share of such doctoral students receiving full funding ( $33 \%$ ) and the largest share receiving no funding (31\%).
- Anthropology programs had the largest average number of graduate students providing grading and classroom support (an estimated 14.5 per department employing at least one such assistant; Figure 4D). Departments of communication and race/ethnic studies had the smallest number of graduate students serving in that capacity (3.3). In most humanities disciplines, the estimated average was between four and eight. However, across all the disciplines surveyed, a nonnegligible number of departments granting only bachelor's degrees used graduate-student labor, which indicates that at least some departments were using graduate students from other disciplines.
- In most humanities disciplines, the estimated average number of graduate students providing grading and classroom support was considerably larger than the number serving as instructors of record for a class of their own. ${ }^{11}$ The notable exception was philosophy, where an average of 4.6 graduate students per department provided grading support and almost 12 led their own classes. In departments of American studies, communication, English, and LLE, the average number of graduate students serving as the instructor of record was also somewhat larger than the number just grading.

4C: Estimated Shares of Full-Time, First-Year Doctoral Students in the Humanities Receiving Financial Support, by Discipline, Fall 2017*

* Combined English/LLE was excluded from the figure because reliable estimates could not be generated for these departments. For several of the other disciplines, the estimated shares for partial support and no support had standard errors that were more than $25 \%$ of the size of the share. These estimates should thus be interpreted with caution. Please see Table 16 (in the Appendix) for details.

5. Preparing Students for the Workforce

Since the Great Recession and the subsequent decline in humanities majors, the news media have focused considerable attention on the relationship between the humanities degree and occupational outcomes. In this round of the HDS, the survey inquired about a variety of practices related to preparing students for the workforce, including the career services available to the departments' students and department-offered activities with a professional or vocational element. The survey also inquired about departments' career tracking of graduate students.

Key findings:

- A slight majority of humanities departments were satisfied with the quality of the career services available to students at their institutions, with an estimated $54 \%$ rating the services as "good" or "very good" (Figure 5A). Approximately a third, however, considered the quality of such services only "fair." Ten percent believed the services at their institutions to be "poor" or "very poor."
- By a wide margin, history of science departments offered the most negative assessment of the student career services provided by their institutions, with an estimated $42 \%$ rating the services "poor" or "very poor" (Figure 5B). The discipline with the next largest share of dissatisfied departments, $16 \%$, was race/ethnic studies. Communication departments offered the most positive assessment of the career services offered to their students, with an estimated $68 \%$ rating them "good" or "very good."
- Communication departments were the most likely among those in the humanities to have a professional program (such as a teacher credentialing program or a journalism program; Figure 5C). An estimated $37 \%$ of departments in the discipline had such a program in fall 2017. At least 30\% of English, history, LLE, linguistics, and musicology departments also offered professional programs. Such programs were substantially less common among departments in the other disciplines, however.
- Relatively few humanities departments had faculty teaching in professional schools (e.g., business school, law school, engineering, or medical/dental/nursing school; Figure 5D) at their colleges and universities. While an estimated 29\% of LLE departments taught courses in a professional school, that was the only discipline in which more than $20 \%$ of the departments did so. ${ }^{12}$ While the role of ethics training is often noted in the media as important for business and medical practitioners, just $17 \%$ of philosophy departments had faculty teaching in a professional school.
- The need to expose humanities students (at the undergraduate and graduate level) to information on a range of career options has been widely discussed in recent years. A new set of questions included in the most recent HDS found that at every degree level, departments tended to offer but not require participation in careerrelated activities. For bachelor's degree students, an estimated $13 \%$ of humanities departments required an internship, and $20 \%$ required participation in occupationally oriented coursework or workshops (Figure 5E). For students pursuing terminal master's degrees, the figures were $8 \%$ and $15 \%$ (Figure 5F). For doctoral students, less than $9 \%$ of departments required participation in any of the occupationally oriented activities about which the survey inquired (Figure 5G).
- A new set of questions in the latest round of the HDS asked departments whether they tracked career outcomes for their graduate students. An estimated $40 \%$ of humanities departments tracked career outcomes for all their graduate students, and another $21 \%$ tracked only doctoral students (Figure 5H). Another $29 \%$ did no career tracking, while $10 \%$ were not sure whether the department tracked students.
- While approximately two-thirds of the departments in race/ethnic studies and American studies tracked the career progress of all their graduate students, only $25 \%$ of English and history of science departments did so. Another 20\% of English departments tracked outcomes for doctoral students - slightly less than the share of English departments ( $23 \%$ ) that were not sure whether they did such tracking.

6. Incorporating the Digital

Since the 1990s, the humanities have been working to incorporate digital elements into the work of departments. This involves efforts to provide online courses to facilitate the needs of less-traditional students and extend the reach of the college or the department. Electronic technology is also used by some departments to facilitate research and the dissemination of scholarship.

Key findings:

- An estimated $30 \%$ of departments in the humanities offered at least one fully online course in the 2016-17 academic year, and only $15 \%$ offered a hybrid course (i.e., one with both online and on-site components; Figure 6A). Departments in primarily undergraduate institutions were the least likely to offer either kind of course.
- The estimated share of departments offering fully online or hybrid courses (Figure 6B) varied considerably among disciplines. While an estimated $41 \%$ of communication departments and $37 \%$ of philosophy departments offered fully online courses, just $9 \%$ of American studies and history of science departments did so. One third of communication departments offered hybrid courses, more than twice the percentage for every other discipline.
- Among the departments with fully online courses, those in the disciplines of English and women/gender studies offered the largest average number (an estimated 7.6 per department offering that type of course; Figure 6C). The discipline with the next highest average was communication, with departments in this discipline offering an average of 6.4 fully online courses. Religion departments offered a comparatively large number of hybrid courses on average ( 8.4 per department offering that type of course). The next highest averages (4.3 per department) were found in English, LLE, and women/gender studies.
- Despite considerable attention to the digital humanities in the media, an estimated two-thirds of departments lacked a center or lab dedicated to such research on their campus (Figure 6D). Fifty-six percent of the departments at research universities had access to a center, compared to $17 \%$ of departments at comprehensive colleges and universities.
- The survey estimates that less than $20 \%$ of departments offered a seminar on digital methods (for either research or teaching), and approximately a quarter had a faculty member specializing in digital humanities. The share of departments estimated to have formal guidelines for evaluating digital publications for promotion and tenure was smaller than the share with a faculty member specializing in digital humanities.
- The highest rates of overall engagement with the digital humanities were found in the disciplines of folklore, history of science, and linguistics-departments that were more likely to be found in research institutions (Figure 6E). Among disciplines whose departments were distributed more evenly across institution types, English had the highest estimated rate of overall engagement with digital humanities. While $27 \%$ of all humanities departments had a specialist in digital humanities, $46 \%$ of English departments had such a specialist. And 32\% of English departments had formal guidelines for evaluating digital publications for tenure and promotion, compared to $20 \%$ for the humanities as a whole.

7. Other Department Policies and Practices

The third iteration of the HDS was designed to provide benchmark data on a variety of other departmental policies and practices of interest to the field, such as research support for faculty, the importance of certain activities for tenure decisions, and outreach to the community.

Key findings:

- In most humanities departments, full-time tenured and tenure-track faculty members had access to research support (through the institution or the department; Figure 7A). While an estimated $73 \%$ of the departments offered support for research to full-time nontenured and non-tenure-track faculty members, less than a third of departments provided such support to their parttime faculty members. In the disciplines of classical studies, combined English/LLE, communication, English, musicology, and philosophy, a quarter or less of departments provided support for faculty members employed part-time.
- Several disciplines experienced a statistically significant increase from 2012 to 2017 in the share of departments offering research support to certain categories of faculty. In religion, a greater share of departments offered support to full-time tenured or tenure-track faculty. In art history and classical studies, the increase in share was for both nontenured and non-tenure-track full-time faculty. In history of science, a greater share of departments provided research support to part-time faculty in 2017 than in 2012.
- Teaching was of greatest importance for purposes of tenure decisions, with an estimated $78 \%$ of departments rating it as "essential" and another $18 \%$ describing it as "very important" (Figure 7B). Publications were cited as "essential" by $54 \%$ of departments and as "very important" by another $21 \%$.
- Although a growing number of commenters in recent years have pointed to public humanities as a vehicle for elevating the profile of the field, only an estimated $11 \%$ of departments indicated that such activity was "very important" or "essential" for tenure. ${ }^{13}$

[^8]- While an estimated $91 \%$ of departments at research institutions considered publications "essential" to achieving tenure, less than $40 \%$ of departments at other types of institutions held a similar view (Figure 7C). Conversely, over $85 \%$ of the departments at primarily undergraduate or comprehensive institutions rated teaching "essential," as compared to $57 \%$ of the departments at research universities. The public humanities were considered "essential" for tenure by a negligible share of department chairs at all three types of institution.
- In an estimated half of humanities departments, faculty members, staff, or students had been involved with state humanities councils or community organizations (Figure 7D). In 43\% of departments, faculty, staff, or students had participated in community-service endeavors involving primary or secondary schools, however, less than a quarter of departments had worked with community colleges "to attract new majors into their programs.".
- Among the disciplines, the estimated rates of community service varied substantially depending on the type of activity. At least $70 \%$ of departments in the disciplines of art history, folklore, and history had engaged with state humanities councils or community organizations. English, history, and LLE were the only disciplines in which at least half of departments had engaged with precollegiate teachers or students. Only in the disciplines of communication and race/ethnic studies had more than a third of departments partnered with community colleges to recruit students.

7A: Estimated Share of Humanities Departments Providing Institutional or Departmental Support for Faculty Research, by Discipline, Fall 2017*

* Folklore was excluded from the figure because it was not possible to generate reliable estimates for the discipline.
 For both communication and musicology, the value for part-time faculty members should be interpreted with caution, as the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate. For combined English/LLE (these departments grant degrees in both English and languages and literatures other than English [LLE]), the estimate for full-time nontenured/non-tenure-track faculty should be interpreted with the same caution.

Tables and Summary of MethodologyPrepared byAnne Marie Porter, Jack Pold, and Susan WhiteStatistical Research Center at the American Institute of Physics

The Populations Described by the Estimates in This Report

For Repeat Disciplines

During HDS 3, we contacted the same departments that responded during HDS 2, with no additions. We did not include any departments that gained degree-granting status in the disciplines since 2007-08 (for disciplines included in HDS 1) or 2012-13 (for disciplines that didn't join the study until HDS 2; see the Appendix, Part C for information as to when each discipline joined the study.) ${ }^{14}$ When we weighted the data to estimate the values for HDS 3, we were only able to estimate the values for the population of departments granting degrees when a discipline was first added to the study. Therefore, the findings in this report do not describe all the U.S.-based degreegranting departments within these disciplines in 2017-18.

For New Disciplines

For new disciplines, the estimates reported here are nationally representative, meaning that they describe all U.S.-based degree-granting departments within these disciplines as of 2017-2018.

Understanding the Comparisons with Findings from Earlier Surveys in the HDS Series & Among Disciplines

For the repeat disciplines, we assess the health of the remaining departments in these disciplines by comparing averages and proportions over time using statistical significance. For example, we analyzed if the average number of students earning bachelor's degrees per department in a discipline is increased or declined since 2012-13. Throughout this report, for repeat disciplines, the changes from the HDS 2 data are included if the change is statistically significant. If the change is not significant, that cell of the table indicates "No $\delta$ ".

We made these comparisons using only departments that responded to both rounds of the survey. Using only these departments to test for changes increases the statistical power of the test; that is, this approach leads to a reduction in the probability that we will fail to find a difference between the two rounds when one exists. (Though feasible, no comparisons of averages or proportions between the HDS 1 and HDS 3 have been made; and it would be inappropriate for readers to do so by merely calculating the difference between the values supplied in HDS reports pertinent reports, as it would impossible to know whether any observed change was statistically significant.)

Even though we have chosen an approach with increased statistical power, the fact remains that we are using data from a sample of departments to make statements about an entire set of departments. Thus, there is some uncertainty in the test. We have indicated the uncertainty using a standard statistic: a $95 \%$ confidence interval. The $95 \%$ refers to the process itself; it is not an indication of certainty. The width of the interval indicates the level of reliability in the estimate. For more on confidence intervals, please see the Appendix, Part E.

Due to resource constraints, such comparisons were not made for most the totals reported here (e.g., the number of students completing a bachelor's degree in a discipline), and, as with averages and proportions, direct comparisons of these totals would be inappropriate. It is possible, however, to determine whether there has been statistically significant change between the HDS 2 and HDS 3 by examining the corresponding average or proportion. Where there has been a positive or negative change over time in these values, there is a change - in the same direction - in the total value. What cannot be gleaned from this report is the magnitude of that change.

It should be noted that statistical significance depends on several factors, not solely the absolute difference between two values. While differences that are not marked as significant may seem to be the same size as, or even larger than, those marked as significant, they are not statistically significant. The most likely factors attributing to the lack of significance when the absolute difference seems "large enough" are a smaller sample size or a larger variation within that discipline.

Statistical significance should not be confused with practical significance. An observed change may be statistically significant (i.e., there is a high likelihood of it's being due to a true change in the characteristic of the population and not a result of the sample we happened to draw), but be so small as to have few, if any, real-world implications.

While it is certainly possible to compare averages among the disciplines included in HDS 3 , one should note that any observed differences may not be statistically significant.

If a comparison for an average or proportion is not provided for repeat disciplines, it is because the findings relate to a question that was not asked or was asked differently in HDS 2.

Finally, as explained in the Part E of the Appendix, estimated changes from 2012 to 2017 are given as confidence intervals (e.g., "Down $4 \%$ to $22 \%$ "). The width of the interval is determined by the amount of error associated with the estimate. Where the change estimate is based on the responses from a small number of departments and/or there is a great deal of variability among the departments on which the estimate is based, the error associated with the estimate will be large, leading to a very wide interval. In some cases, this results in an interval so wide it suggests that the 2012 value was a negative value or, in the case of a percentage, a value greater than $100 \%$.

* The proportion of part-time faculty in Table 3 will not necessarily match that from Table 2 since some part-time faculty members are tenured or tenure-track. In Table 2, these will have been included in the tenured or tenure-track categories. In every case, the proportion shown as part-time in Table 2 should be less than or equal to that shown in Table 3.

Note: For the repeat disciplines, only departments already in the 2012-13 sample were included in the 2017-18 sample. Thus, these values do not include data for any departments that may have begun granting degrees since a discipline was first added to the study (i.e., since 2007-08 or 2012-13, depending on the discipline).

* These values are one-year averages; these are not averages per department- they are averages for the entire discipline.
 The upper bound for the estimate is $100 \%$; therefore, significance testing was not performed on this value.

Note: Information for the each of the disciplines is provided later in the Appendix (see Part B, "Profiles of Individual Disciplines"). Comparisons to 2012-13 data are not valid since the question changed. For the repeat disciplines, only departments already in the 2012-13 sample were included in the 2017-18 sample. Thus, these values do not include data for any departments that may have begun granting degrees since a discipline was first added to the study (i.e., since 2007-08 or 2012-13, depending on the discipline).

 Public humanities was defined in the questionnaire as making the humanities and/or humanities scholarship accessible to the general public.

Note: For the repeat disciplines, only departments already in the 2012-13 sample were included in the 2017-18 sample. Thus, these values do not include data for any departments that may have begun granting degrees since a discipline was first added to the study (i.e., since 2007-08 or 2012-13, depending on the discipline).
! Interpret with caution; the standard error is more than $25 \%$ of the estimate.
$\diamond$ Indicates there are too few respondents to provide a reliable estimate of the change.

* Personal, spousal, or family support, wages from work unrelated to the program, and loans are not considered financial support.
 The upper and lower bounds for the estimate are $100 \%$ and $0 \%$; therefore, no significance testing was performed on this value.

Note: For the repeat disciplines, only departments already in the 2012-13 sample were included in the 2017-18 sample. Thus, these values do not include data for any departments that may have begun granting degrees since a discipline was first added to the study (i.e., since 2007-08 or 2012-13, depending on the discipline).

$\diamond$ Indicates there are too few respondents to provide a reliable estimate.

* Includes job fairs geared to the interests of the department's majors
 There were three possible choices for each of the activities included in the table (activity is not offered, activity is offered but not required, or activity is required); respondents could choose only one. Thus, the total proportion of departments that participate in the activity is the sum of the two columns; the remainder to sum to $100 \%$ is the proportion of departments that do not offer the activity.

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

History

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

Note: These numbers do not include data for any departments that may have begun granting degrees since 2007-08. Data regarding instructors of record for undergraduate courses were collected differently for 2012, and thus no comparison is possible.

* It was not possible to generate comparable estimates for graduate courses, due to too few departments reporting faculty of certain kinds. The issue is further discussed in Part H.

 There were three possible choices for each of the activities included in the table (activity is not offered, activity is offered but not required, or activity is required); respondents could choose only one. Thus, the total proportion of departments that participate in the activity is the sum of the two columns; the remainder to sum to $100 \%$ is the proportion of departments that do not offer the activity.

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

Note: These numbers do not include data for any departments that may have begun granting degrees since 2007-08. Data regarding instructors of record for undergraduate courses were collected differently for 2012, and thus no comparison is possible.

* It was not possible to generate comparable estimates for graduate courses, due to too few departments reporting faculty of certain kinds. The issue is further discussed in Part H.

B2  : Overview of Findings for Disciplines First Included in HDS 2

Classical Studies

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

* It was not possible to generate comparable estimates for graduate courses, due to too few departments reporting faculty of certain kinds. The issue is further discussed in Part H.

Communication

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

Folklore

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

Philosophy

Please note:

- any references to the 2016-17 academic year include the 2017 summer term;
- the units for any noted changes from 2012-13 in estimated percentages are percentage points (though the changes are expressed as percentages to conserve space); and
- estimated medians were not compared with those from 2012-13.

${ }^{* *}$ There were three possible choices for each of the activities included in the table (activity is not offered, activity is offered but not required, or activity is required); respondents could choose only one. Thus, the total proportion of departments that participate in the activity is the sum of the two columns; the remainder to sum to $100 \%$ is the proportion of departments that do not offer the activity.

 There were three possible choices for each of the activities included in the table (activity is not offered, activity is offered but not required, or activity is required); respondents could choose only one. Thus, the total proportion of departments that participate in the activity is the sum of the two columns; the remainder to sum to $100 \%$ is the proportion of departments that do not offer the activity.

C. Criteria for Department Inclusion

The Statistical Research Center (SRC) of the American Institute of Physics (AIP) was contracted to conduct the third round of the Humanities Departmental Survey (HDS 3). The SRC had conducted the first round (HDS 1) in 2007-08 and the second round in 201213 (HDS 2). The disciplinary societies included in the study are:

- American Academy of Religion (HDS 1/2/3 participant)
- American Folklore Society (HDS $2 / 3$ participant)
- American Historical Association (HDS 1/2/3 participant)
- American Musicological Society (HDS 2/3 participant)
- Society for Classical Studies (HDS 2/3 participant)
- American Philosophical Association (HDS 2/3 participant)
- College Art Association (HDS 1/2/3 participant)
- History of Science Society (HDS 1/2/3 participant)
- Linguistics Society of America (HDS 1/2/3 participant)
- Modern Language Association of America (HDS 1/2/3 participant)
- National Communication Association (HDS 2/3 participant)
- American Studies Association (new participant in HDS 3)
- American Anthropological Association (new participant in HDS 3)

While there were six societies indicated as participating in HDS 1, these six societies account for eight disciplines. The Modern Language Association of America includes English, Languages & Literatures other than English (referred to as Foreign Languages in HDS 1), and MLA combined English / Languages & Literatures other than English departments and programs. With the five new societies added in HDS 2 and the four new societies added in HDS 3, there are a total of seventeen discipline-based departments and programs included in HDS 3. There were no participating societies representing Race and Ethnic Studies or Women and Gender Studies in HDS 3.

Criteria for Inclusion

Several criteria were used to determine whether specific departments and programs qualified for inclusion in the sample that was the basis of this study. First, departments or programs had to award a bachelor's, master's, or doctoral degree in at least one of the target disciplines. As it would have been prohibitively expensive to contact every department in the country as to their degree-granting status, we instead consulted the U.S. Department of Education's Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (IPEDS). If a department had reported to IPEDS that it had awarded an average of at least one degree within the five previous years, it was eligible for inclusion in the sample. The second criterion for inclusion was that the department or program had to be housed in a four-year institution in the United States. The sample was selected so that it would accurately represent degree-granting departments and programs by Carnegie levels: Primarily Research, Comprehensive, and Primarily Undergraduate. Finally, as in HDS 1 and HDS 2, HDS 3 intentionally excluded variations of the target fields that were classified as applied.

Disciplines included in HDS 2 and Longitudinal Comparisons

For the thirteen discipline-based departments and programs included in HDS 2, the same sample was used for HDS 3. This allows for direct longitudinal comparisons. No attempt was made to include departments and programs in these disciplines that had begun granting degrees since 2008, when the original HDS 1 sample was drawn. Thus, the comparisons for the numbers of departments and programs will show only reductions. It is possible that the reductions exhibited among the HDS 3 sample have been offset by the creation of new departments and programs. This study will not capture any growth in the number of departments and programs.

Response Rates

Table C1 provides details on the response rates by discipline; the overall response rate was $64 \%$.

D. Definitions

Quoted material refers to the questionnaire wording.

All Remaining HDS 2 Departments

Some of the departments awarding degrees in the repeat disciplines when HDS 2 was conducted were no longer granting degrees in that discipline at the time of HDS 3. The vast majority of departments ( $95 \%$ or more) were still awarding degrees at the time of HDS 3. We use this terminology to highlight the fact that the findings presented here are not representative of all of the departments granting degrees in the repeat disciplines at the time of HDS 3; instead, they are representative of all HDS 2 departments that continued to award degrees in the repeat disciplines when HDS 3 was conducted.

Awarding degrees in/granting degrees in ...

Only departments and programs that offer a bachelor's, master's, or doctoral degree in the specified discipline are included in this report. Departments and programs that award a certificate or minor degree in the specified discipline are not included.

Bachelor's degrees awarded in a discipline

This reflects the respondents' answers to "How many students completed bachelor's degrees in <discipline> in your department or program during the 201617 academic year (including the summer 2017 term)?'

Community Outreach

The respondents were asked "about ways beyond research (except where that research is at the request of the community and/or meets an immediate community need) that your department involves itself with the larger community."

Departments

Throughout this document the term department includes departments and programs offering degrees in the specified discipline. This terminology is necessary because some disciplines, for example linguistics, may be housed in stand-alone departments or they may be a program that exists within a larger department or they may be a program that includes multiple departments.

References to departments in a particular discipline do not indicate that every university granting a degree in that discipline includes a stand-alone department within that discipline; rather, these references may include stand-alone departments or programs that exist within a larger department or interdisciplinary programs that exist across departments.

No attempt was made to distinguish among departments, programs within a single department, or programs that span departments. The instruction for the survey instrument directed the respondent to "please answer for your department or program in <discipline>. The only restriction placed upon participants was that they offered a degree in the discipline of interest.

Graduate Courses

This includes "for-credit graduate courses."
Respondents were asked to "include any online or hybrid course taught by department faculty."

Graduate Students in a Discipline

This reflects the respondents' answers to "How many graduate students in <discipline> (master's and doctoral, full- and part-time, of any status) did your department or program have during the fall 2017 term?"

HDS 1

This refers to the first Humanities Departmental Survey, which focused on the state of departments in the fall term of the 2007-08academic year and, for some items, the previous academic term.

HDS 2

This refers to the second Humanities Departmental Survey which focused on the state of departments in the fall term of the 2012-13 academic year and, for some items, the previous academic year.

Major in a Discipline

This reflects the respondents' answers to "How many juniors and seniors have declared a major in <discipline> in your department or program, as of the beginning of the fall 2017 term?"

Minor in a Discipline

This reflects the respondents' answers to "How many students complete a minor in <discipline> in your department or program during the 2016-2017 academic year (including the 2017 summer term)?"

Online Courses

This includes "for-credit online courses."

Programs

Throughout this document the term departments includes both departments and programs offering degrees in the indicated discipline. This terminology is necessary because some disciplines, for example Linguistics, may be housed in stand-alone departments or they may be a program that exists within a larger department or they may exist as a program that includes multiple departments.

References to departments in a particular discipline do not indicate that every university granting a degree in that discipline includes a stand-alone department within that discipline; rather, these references may include stand-alone departments or programs that exist within a larger department or interdisciplinary programs that exist across departments.

No attempt was made to distinguish among departments, programs within a single department, or programs that span departments. The instruction for the survey instrument directed the respondent to "please answer for your department or program in <discipline>." The only restriction place upon participants was that they offered a degree in the discipline of interest.

Repeat Disciplines

The following disciplines participated in the 2012-13 Survey of Humanities Departments (HDS 2). Where possible, comparisons are made with the 2012-13 data.

- Art History (AH)
- English (EN)
- Languages and Literatures other than English (LLE)
- History (H)
- History of Science (HoS)
- Linguistics (LN)
- MLA Combined English / Languages and Literatures other than English (MLAC)
- Religion (REL)
- Classical Studies (CLS)
- Communication (CM)
- Folklore (FL)
- Musicology (MU)
- Philosophy (PS)

E. Confidence Intervals

A confidence interval is an interval estimate of a population parameter. The term "population" means that the parameter describes all of the units of interest. In this study, the units of interest are typically all of the departments characterized by the study. For example, for English, the population described in this study is the 1,064 departments that award degrees in English and were included in HDS 1. Since we were not able to collect data from each of these 1,064 departments in HDS 2 and HDS 3, we are not able to calculate definitively any changes in the characteristics of these departments between the two rounds of the study. Instead, we estimate the change based on a representative sample of the departments.

The changes from HDS 2 to HDS 3 are expressed as $95 \%$ confidence intervals. The $95 \%$ does not refer to accuracy or reliability; it refers to the process of calculating the interval. Specifically, a $95 \%$ confidence interval is expected to contain (include) the true parameter 95 times if 100 representative samples are taken and the interval is estimated using the same formula each time. In reality, we do not take 100 representative samples; we take just one. So, there is always a chance that the sample we have results in one of the 5 intervals which does not include the true parameter; however, there is a much higher chance that the sample we have results in one of the 95 intervals which does include the true parameter.

There is no way to calculate a $100 \%$ confidence interval. If we want to be certain we have captured the truth, we have to get data from every member of the population and ensure that there are (1) no errors in the interpretation of the question, (2) no errors in data compilation by the departments, and (3) no errors in data entry or transmission. To do this would be far too costly.

F. A Note on the Number of Departments for the Repeat

Disciplines

Since we did not refresh the sample between HDS 2 and HDS 3, this survey can capture only a reduction in the number of departments granting degrees in a discipline. That is, we attempted to contact all the departments that were awarding degrees in the discipline of interest and were in the sample for HDS 1 and HDS 2. We learned that some of these departments had ceased granting degrees in the discipline of interest. It is not clear whether these departments ceased to exist; they may still offer courses in the discipline of interest.

Furthermore, we did not attempt to determine the number of departments which began granting degrees in the various disciplines between the administration of HDS 1 and HDS 3. As noted in the introduction, a cursory examination of U.S. Department of Education data suggests that it is possible that two or three departments gained degree-granting status for every department that lost it.

In the table below, we indicate the number of departments granting degrees in each discipline at the time of HDS 2 that informed us they were no longer granting degrees in the discipline at the time of HDS 3. These numbers reflect only the departments that informed us of their loss in degree-granting status, but it is unknown how many nonresponding departments in the HDS 3 sample may no longer grant degrees. Please also note that these are not estimates (based on weighted sample data) of the total number of HDS 2 departments in that lost degree-granting status by HDS 3. Again, the values below are merely counts of the departments in our sample who told us of a change in their status between HDS 2 and HDS 3.

Comparing Totals from HDS 2 with those from HDS 3

The totals for each of the repeat disciplines is the total number (of faculty members, of students earning a bachelor's degree, etc.) in the departments which were granting degrees in the discipline of interest at the time of HDS 2 and were still granting degrees in the discipline of interest at the time of HDS 3. As shown in Table E1, we know that some of the departments that were granting degrees at the time of HDS 2 were no longer granting degrees in that discipline at the time of HDS 3. The totals provided in the HDS 1 report are estimates of the total for all of the departments granting degrees in the discipline of interest. We know that at least some departments have begun granting degrees in the disciplines of interest since 2008. Since we do not know how many for any discipline, we cannot estimate a total for all of the departments granting degrees in the discipline of interest for HDS 2 and HDS 3. Therefore, we do not show the HDS 2 totals in this report. The HDS 2 totals should not be compared directly with the HDS 3 totals for the repeat disciplines.

An Example: Linguistics

To demonstrate why totals from HDS 3 should not be compared with totals from HDS 1 or HDS 2, we examined the change in the number of departments in Linguistics, a repeating HDS 1 discipline. We obtained from IPEDS the number of departments granting a degree in Linguistics. No list of degree-granting institutions is completely accurate, but IPEDS provides data that can demonstrate how the number of institutions change over time.

At the time of HDS 1 in 2007-08, IPEDS indicated that there were 143 four-year institutions awarding a bachelor's, master's, or doctoral degree in Linguistics. The original HDS 1 sample drawn in 2007-08 included 133 of those institutions. At the time of HDS 3 in 2017-18, IPEDS indicated that there were 157 four-year institutions awarding a degree in Linguistics.

Looking at the increase from 143 to 157 institutions, one can conclude that 22 four-year institutions began awarding Linguistics degrees between 2008 and 2017. However, there were also 8 institutions that no longer awarded Linguistics degrees in 2017. Therefore, the overall growth in the number of institutions awarding Linguistics degrees was 14 . This net change is illustrated in Figure F1.

The HDS 3 sample of Linguistics departments only included departments that awarded Linguistics degrees at the time of HDS 1 in 2007-08. No new departments awarding Linguistics degrees after 2008 were contacted in HDS 3. Since the 22 newly created Linguistics departments are not included in the HDS 3 sample, we cannot estimate totals for all the Linguistics departments existing in 2017-18.

Comparisons: Departmental Level or Aggregate?

We know that the number of departments granting degrees in a discipline will change from year-to-year. Some may choose to use the number of departments granting degrees as a measure of the "health" of a discipline. However, the fact that a department has the authority to grant degrees in a discipline does not necessarily mean that it does so. While we do provide an estimate of the number of HDS 2 departments that no longer grant degrees in the discipline of interest in Table E1, we believe that departmental level comparisons are a better measure of the health of a discipline.

Examining what is happening at the departmental level may provide more insight into the health of a discipline than looking at the number of departments granting degrees. For example, if the number of students earning bachelor's degrees per department (or the average number) in a discipline is declining, we might anticipate that some of the smaller departments may lose degree-granting status. Alternatively, if that number is increasing, we might expect more departments to begin offering degrees. We provide the perdepartment averages and proportions and compare them directly with the data from HDS 2. All of the statistical tests for any changes are conducted at the per-department level. So, even though we cannot directly compare a total of $x$ number of graduate students in discipline $y$ for each round of the study, we can compare what is happening at the departmental level. For example, we can compare an average of $x_{1}$ graduate students per department in discipline $y$ in HDS 2 with an average of $x_{2}$ graduate students per department in discipline $y$ in HDS 3. Proportions (the proportion of faculty members who are women, for example) are also departmental level data, so it is appropriate to compare proportions from HDS 2 with those from HDS 3.

We make these comparisons using only departments that responded to both rounds of the survey. Using only these departments to test for changes results in an increase in the statistical power of the test; that is, this approach leads to a reduction in the probability that we will fail to find a difference between the two rounds when one exists.

Even though we have chosen an approach with increased statistical power, the fact remains that we are using data from a sample of departments to make statements about an entire set of departments. Thus, there is some uncertainty in the test. We have indicated the uncertainty using a standard statistic: a $95 \%$ confidence interval. The $95 \%$ refers to the process itself; it is not an indication of certainty. The width of the interval indicates the level of reliability in the estimate. For more on confidence intervals, please see Appendix E.

G. Methodology for Hypothesis Tests

In this section, we describe the methodology used for the hypothesis test performed as part of this study.

Testing for Significant Differences in Number per Department

We used a paired difference test to test for significant changes in the number of [faculty members, students earning bachelor's degrees, etc.] per department. A paired difference test is used to determine whether or not population means differ. Paired difference tests increase the statistical power of the test. The statistical power of the test is the probability of rejecting the null hypothesis if it is false. In the test, the hypotheses are:
$H_{0}: \mu_{\mathrm{D}}=0$ (There has been no change.)
$H_{1}: \mu_{\mathrm{D}} \neq 0$ (There has been a change.)
where $\mathrm{xDi}_{\mathrm{in}}=\mathrm{x}_{\mathrm{it}}-\mathrm{x}_{\mathrm{i}(\mathrm{t}-1)}$
(The observation of interest, $\mathrm{xDi}_{\mathrm{D}}$, is the observed data for department i at the current period, $\mathrm{x}_{\mathrm{it}}$ minus the observed data for department i at the previous period, $\mathrm{x}_{\mathrm{i}(t-1)}$. In other words, we are examining the change in a measure for each department.)

We set alpha ( $\alpha$ ) at 0.05 . This means that, on average, we would believe a difference exists when one does not one time in twenty tests. We report the $95 \%$ confidence interval for any significant differences. These confidence intervals are all at the departmental, or per department, level.

Testing for Significant Differences in Proportion per Department

We used a chi-square $\left(\chi^{2}\right)$ test of independence to determine whether or not changes in proportions within each department were significant. In this test, the hypotheses are:
$\mathrm{H}_{0}$ : The variables are independent. (The distributions do not vary between HDS 1 and HDS 2.)
$\mathrm{H}_{1}$ : The variables are not independent. (The distributions do vary between HDS 1 and HDS 2.)

We again set alpha $(\alpha)$ at 0.05 . This means that, on average, we would believe a difference exists when one does not one time in twenty tests. We report the $95 \%$ confidence interval for any significant differences. These confidence intervals are all at the departmental, or per department, level.

Note that, for the faculty data, the data was used for both types of tests since some of the faculty tables are proportion of faculty members in various categories and some of the faculty tables are number of faculty members.

H. Questions that Did Not Work

Number of Graduate Courses Taught

In HDS 3, we revised a question asked in HDS 2 about the number of for-credit graduate courses taught within a department. Instead of asking for both the number of courses and the number of students enrolled in these courses, we only asked departments to indicate the number of courses taught by faculty members in the department at different academic ranks. The introductory text and question content are listed below.

The following questions ask about the number of for-credit graduate courses in <discipline> of different types taught by instructional personnel of various statuses.
If a course is divided into sections (i.e., offered at different times and/or taught by different instructors), please count each section as a course.
Do not count discussion sections as courses.
Please also:

- count all courses listed at the graduate level, including those courses crosslisted at the undergraduate level, and
- include any online or hybrid courses taught by department faculty in your counts.

If no faculty members hold appointments in your department or program,

- please include all courses offered by the program itself.
- Exclude courses that satisfy program requirements but are not offered by your program, such as a Chemistry class required in an Archaeology program.
(22) For each of the instructional personnel categories below, please indicate the number of graduate courses taught and the numbers of enrollments in these courses for the fall 2017 term.

Throughout this report, we use survey responses from departments to calculate estimates for the whole population of departments using weighting procedures. To calculate appropriate estimates for a question item, we require at least five departments to provide a response. For the question asking about the number of graduate courses taught within a department, we did not receive enough responses from departments in any discipline to calculate estimates for courses taught by graduate students in a department. Therefore, we did not report any total values for this question item in the report. It is possible that graduate-level courses are not often taught by graduate students, which might explain why not enough departments were able to respond to this item.

Similar issues occurred for part-time faculty members and full-time non-tenure track faculty members that teach graduate courses. Although a few disciplines provided enough department responses to calculate population-level estimates, most disciplines did not. As with graduate students, it is possible that graduate courses are not often taught by part-time and full-time non-tenure-track faculty members, which might explain why not enough departments were able to respond to this item. The same issue did not occur for the number of courses taught by tenured or tenure-track faculty members. With the exception of Folklore and Combined English/Literatures and Languages other than English departments, we received enough department responses to calculate populationestimates for this question item.

It is also important to note that we did not have the same issue calculating populationlevel estimates for the number of undergraduate courses taught within a department. With the exception of smaller disciplines such as Folklore, History of Science, and Combined English/Languages and Literatures other than English, we received enough department responses to calculate estimates for this question item.

I. The Questionnaire

The questionnaire was presented online. Respondents were able to download a PDF which contained all the questions if they wished to use it to compile data. The PDF is on the following pages. The header at the top of each page read:

The discipline for which we are requesting information was specified in the e-mail request.
Please answer for your department or program in <discipline>.

The Faculty & Other Instructional Personnel

This section focuses on the number and characteristics of your department's or program's faculty.
For purposes of this survey, faculty members are people who

- hold appointments in your department or program in <discipline> and
- have instructional responsibilities.

Please count as faculty members people with instructional responsibilities who are on leave (including sabbatical leave) or temporarily unavailable to teach for any other reason. Any adjunct faculty members should be counted as full- or part-time "non-tenure track".

Not considered faculty members are:

- teaching and research assistants,
- graduate students in your department or program who teach courses as instructors of record, and
- personnel with $100 \%$ research appointments.

If no faculty members hold appointments in your program

- Count as faculty members those people (excluding graduate students in your program) teaching courses offered by the program itself.
- Do not count those people teaching courses that satisfy program requirements but are offered outside your program, such as a required Chemistry class for an Archaeology program.

The following question asks about the total number of faculty members of different statuses in your department or program in <discipline> at the beginning of the fall 2017 term. Please give headcounts, rather than full-time equivalents (FTEs).

Undergraduate Education

(13) Please indicate the total enrollment in undergraduate courses in your department in the fall term of the 2017-18 academic year. (This is sometimes designated the "duplicated headcount".)
(14) How many students completed bachelor's degrees in <discipline> in your department or program during the 2016-2017 academic year (including the 2017 summer term)?
(15) How many students completed a minor in <discipline> in your department or program during the 2016-2017 academic year (including the 2017 summer term)? $\qquad$
(16) How many juniors and seniors have declared a major in <discipline> in your department or program, as of the beginning of the fall 2017 term?
(17) Does your department or program have benchmark requirements for all major completing the program? (Please exclude institution-wide assessments like the Collegiate Learning Assessment.) Check all that apply.

Online Education

The next question asks about for-credit online courses taught by your department or program's faculty members or graduate students, if instructors of record, during the 2016-17 academic year (including the 2017 summer term and any intersession terms).

These may include courses that you would have included in the Fall 2017 course counts requested in the undergraduate and/or graduate education sections of the survey.
If no faculty members hold appointments in your department or program,

- please count those for-credit online courses offered by the program.
- Exclude courses that satisfy program requirements but are not offered by your program, such as a Chemistry class required in an Archaeology program.
If a course is divided into sections (i.e., offered at different times and/or taught by different instructors), please count each section as a course.
Do not count discussion sections as courses.
(24) For each course type listed below, please indicate the number of courses taught and the numbers of enrollments in these following format.

Digital Humanities

Note: If your department or program is Anthropology, questions 25 and 26 should not appear.
(25) Is there a center or lab dedicated to digital humanities research on your campus?

- No
- Yes
(26) Does your department or program have one or more faculty members that specialize in digital humanities?
- No
- Yes
(27) In the 2016-2017 academic year (including the 2017 summer term) did your department or program offer at least one graduate- or undergraduate-level seminar or course that focuses on digital methods for research and teaching?
- No
- Yes
(28) Does your department or program have formal guidelines for evaluating digital publications to ensure faculty members receive credit for tenure and promotion?

O No

- Yes

Humanities & the Professions

(29) Are there professional programs within your department (e.g., a teacher credentialing program within a history department or a journalism program within an English department)?

- No
- Yes

The next question asks about courses taught in professional schools by your department/program's faculty members and graduate students (if instructors of record).

Faculty members may be full- or part-time. Please include in your count all courses taught by faculty members who hold an appointment in your department or program, even if those faculty members also hold an appointment in the professional school in which they are teaching the course(s).

If no faculty members hold an appointment in your department or program, please count all classes offered by your program in a professional school setting.
If a course is divided into sections (i.e., offered at different times and/or taught by different instructors), please count each section as a course. Do not count discussion sections as courses.
(30) In the previous academic year (2016-2017, including the 2017 summer term), how many graduate or undergraduate courses were taught by your department/program's faculty members or graduate students in professional schools (e.g., law school, business school, engineering, or medical/dental/nursing school) affiliated with your institution? Check here $\square$ if your institution does not have professional schools.

Workforce Preparation

(31) How would you rate the quality of the career services program at your college for students in your department?

- Very poor
- Poor
- Fair
- Good
- Very good

[^0]:    ${ }^{1}$ For the sample size and response rate for each discipline included in this round of the survey, see Table C1 in the Appendix.
    ${ }^{2}$ The nature of these estimates depends on whether the discipline was added with this round of the survey or had been included in earlier rounds; the issue is discussed below under "Guide to Interpreting the Findings in This Report."

[^1]:    ${ }^{3}$ For the purpose of this study, degrees awarded in the final degree categories were included: 05.0200 Ethnic Studies; 05.0201 African-American/Black Studies; 05.0202 American Indian/Native American Studies; 05.0203 Hispanic-American, Puerto Rican, and Mexican- American/Chicano Studies; 05.0206 AsianAmerican Studies; and 05.0299 Ethnic, Cultural Minority, Gender, and Group Studies, Other.

[^2]:    ${ }^{4}$ The sample frame for this category was constructed from departments and programs with degree awards in 05.0207 Women's Studies and 05.0208 Gay/Lesbian Studies.

[^3]:    ${ }^{5}$ The most recent (and perhaps last) study was conducted in 2004. For additional information, see: https://nces.ed.gov/surveys/nsopf/index.asp.

    ${ }^{8}$ Since the assignment of gender in this survey relies on a third party (a department chair or administrator), and the categories for non-binary genders vary from campus to campus, this survey only asked about the share of women.

[^5]:    ${ }^{9}$ For disciplines that were included in earlier rounds of the survey, this study does not capture all departments granting degrees in 2017-18, only those still granting degrees in 2017-18. The enrollment total does not reflect those departments that began granting degrees since the year a discipline was first included in the study.

[^6]:    ${ }^{11}$ Average calculated over the number of departments reporting that they employed a graduate student in this capacity.

[^7]:    ${ }^{12}$ Percentages were calculated across only those departments whose institutions have professional schools.

[^10]:    ${ }^{14}$ A cursory examination of data from the U.S. Department of Education's Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (IPEDS) suggests that two or three departments gained degree-granting status for every department that lost degree-granting status. We do not have data from any of these departments.

[^11]:    Note: Numbers do not include data for departments that may have begun granting degrees since 2007-08.

[^12]:    * Average calculated over only those departments that grant graduate degrees.

[^13]:    * Average calculated over the number of departments reporting that they employed a graduate student in this capacity.

[^14]:    * Average calculated over the number of departments reporting that they employed a graduate student in this capacity.
    $\diamond$ Indicates there are too few respondents to provide a reliable estimate.

[^15]:    * Including the 2017 summer term and any intersession terms.
     Average calculated over the number of departments reporting that they offered a course of this kind.

[^16]:    * Average calculated over only those departments that grant graduate degrees.

[^17]:    * Not every department housed in an institution classified as Primarily Research using the Carnegie classifications offers a doctorate or master's degree. No departments housed at Primarily Undergraduate institutions offered a doctorate or master's degree.

[^18]:    * Average calculated over only those departments that grant graduate degrees.

[^19]:    * Average calculated over the number of departments reporting that they employed a graduate student in this capacity.

[^20]:    * Including the 2017 summer term and any intersession terms.
